The cell cycle inhibitor p16INK4a, cyclin-dependent kinase 4 (CDK4) and p53 are known to regulate cell cycle progression. The expression and distribution of these molecules were studied in hepatocellular carcinomas (HCCs) in association with chronic liver disease. p16, CDK4 and p53 were studied immunohistochemically using formalin-fixed, paraffin-embedded, surgically resected liver tissue from 80 patients with HCC. Nuclear expression of p16INK4a was observed in 71.1% of the HCCs. When compared with normal liver tissue, the expression of p16 was significantly decreased in cirrhosis-associated HCCs. By contrast, expression of p16 was significantly increased in chronic hepatitis-associated HCCs, being observed in 73.9% of the cases. The frequency of p16 expression was significantly decreased in poorly differentiated HCCs. Moreover, p16 expression was frequently observed in the cytoplasm of HCCs, especially in poorly differentiated HCCs. 2d92ce491b
