Endoscopy, which allows direct observation and histological analysis of internal organs or tissues, is commonly used for diagnosis and treatment of various diseases. In recent years, many new endoscopic procedures have been developed. In particular, the endoscopic imaging technologies have made remarkable progress. This review summarizes the recent development of endoscopes and their applications. Endoscopic procedures are useful for diagnosis of gastrointestinal cancers, and contribute to the early diagnosis of pancreatic cancer and the staging of esophageal cancer. The capsule endoscope, an endoscopic technology that is in development, has the potential to revolutionize the management of patients with gastrointestinal diseases. Adrienne Brooks' Blondes: The Inside Story Of A Major National Sponsor The year was 1982. Todd Wilson was a rookie agent at a major national insurance agency. I was a young assistant in the auto division and to date the only woman who was allowed to speak to the brokers. As Wilson tried to get me on board, I suggested his mentor approach the owner, then the President of the company, who happened to be a girlfriend of his. I put together a PowerPoint presentation on how I would improve their office operation. Without a doubt, the guy got it! I was hired on the spot and never looked back. That was a game changer for both of us. I got to learn everything from the front office to the claims to the back office. Every department had a new set of eyes and I became a coach, facilitator, training specialist and mentor. My second year I took over Todd's role as a broker. I enjoyed and thrived in my position until my agency needed me to do something I was not very comfortable with — be a sales person. I was going to follow in my husband's footsteps in the insurance business and was now the second female agent. I found my niche. I was a rainmaker. I was able to get business from the clients I was referred to and they were happy with the results. But there was one part of the business that never aligned with me. Women are just not used to being badgered by brokers and men, so I was the exception. I felt like I could not do my 2d92cc491b
