The process starts with learners taking the test with a professional assessor. Students work in small groups to complete the written test. An examiner evaluates the students' answers and marks them in a response grid. The face2face progress test has been designed to be most effective in an English language classroom. For example, teachers may use a time-honoured approach of requiring each group of students to re-read the same text during class. After each re-read, students complete the written test together. The face2face progress test also uses a combination of answering questions in small groups, creating feedback and reinforcing the learning process. The first published edition of the face2face progress test was in 2003. Since then, face2face has been redesigned to include a simpler, more effective method of marking student work. face 2face advanced progress test answer key face 2face lesson plans for pre-intermediate, intermediate and advanced face 2face powerpoint face 2face upper intermediate progress test face2face written test face2face progress test face2face progress test answer key face 2face test answers face2face test results face 2face progress test result See also English as a second or foreign language Linguistics Language education English as a second or foreign language Second language acquisition References External links face2face Cambridge International English Category:English language testsThe present invention relates to a charging apparatus for use in a copying machine, a facsimile machine, or other such office equipment, and more particularly to a charging apparatus which is capable of increasing the speed of charging.
