Stakeholders in and around the business of scientific publishing in East Africa have gathered in Nairobi this week to network, share ideas and work together on priority issues. The three-day Science and Research in East Africa conference, run by the East Africa Science Agency (EASA) and funded by the US National Science Foundation, has highlighted the extraordinary and growing science sector in the region. The conference is hosted by EASA, a regional public body based in Kampala, Uganda, but has been attended by a variety of stakeholders, including scientists, researchers, industry, government and civil society. It is focusing on themes such as: access to and utilisation of science; science and the environment; and scientific management. The latest Economist Intelligence Unit's annual Ease of Doing Business report has revealed a gradual improvement in the business climate in East Africa. Among the 18 countries of East Africa assessed, only Uganda, Kenya and Rwanda have an "elasticity of supply" (the ease in which a good can be supplied) above 100%. This measure is based on the logistics and costs of assembling an order. Read also The other countries have an average elasticity of supply of 40, with the exception of Ethiopia (23). Kenya, Rwanda and Uganda have ranked the highest on a different business climate index. In the Ease of Doing Business 2019 report, Kenya and Uganda were ranked the most improved, while Rwanda was ranked the most improved in the Doing Business 2018 report. The business climate rankings refer to five core sectors of a nation's economy: starting a business, registering property, getting credit, paying taxes and trading across borders. Businesses consider these measures to determine the degree to which the nation facilitates the operation of a business within its borders. Quality research A lack of quality research poses one of the biggest problems facing East Africa, but EASA is working to bring this about. More than 30 research projects have been funded from 2016 through 2017 in the fields of energy, food security, renewable energy, water resources, microfinance, 2d92ce491b
