The U.S. Constitution has long prohibited the government from telling the public what to think and say. Yet the United States is one of only a few countries that monitor the internet and Twitter and Facebook and other means of communication for political expression. Some European governments also set up lists of alleged foreign “agents” to monitor their people’s activities, and they’ve recently updated their lists to include Twitter users. In a statement emailed to news media, Twitter said it “believes that suspending Russia Today from Twitter for what its channels did is a clear violation of its [account] suspension policy, and is clearly a violation of basic free speech principles.” Indeed, as important as the Russian government’s actions may have been, it’s still important that the U.S. and other governments don’t monitor the flow of information on social networks — at least not without a warrant and, ideally, one signed by a judge. The problem is, government authorities, and especially the NSA, are capable of this and worse, from monitoring phone calls and emails to tapping into the backbone of the Internet. This is why it’s time to end warrantless wiretapping in the U.S. and allow all Internet traffic to be free from wiretapping, and to stop the NSA from spying on American citizens. After all, an English jurist named Sir William Blackstone wrote in 1765 that, “What is spoken in private, or scribbled in private, even though it be published abroad, is of no consequence in itself.” Of course, today, his words are not just words, but action. In a 2001 article in the Washington Post, “Congressional efforts to curb the reach of the FBI’s domestic intelligence-gathering powers are gathering steam,” David S. Cloud reported that “a spate of congressional bills and a White House proposal would push the boundaries of the government’s authority to pry into the private lives of citizens.” Cloud wrote that one bill, introduced in the

Thursday, February 13, 2012 Black History Month is a time of reflection, examination of the past, and learning to be a better human being. As black Americans celebrate this week of family, fellowship and pride, let's consider some of the important milestones in African-American history. On February 1, 1849, Denmark Vesey became the first documented victim of the New York City Draft Riots. Vesey was a member of the African Methodist Episcopal (AME 2d92ce491b
