A newcomer by any other name At an exclusive fundraiser for the Republican Governors Association last week, Governor Chris Christie mingled with reporters and shaking their hands. In the middle of the line was a reporter from the New York Daily News, which covered his head with a black boxing glove during his re-election bid last November. The gloves are a clear sign that the press doesn't like Christie. The press has made it clear over the past nine months — they don't like any of the Republican governors. Don't get me wrong. Each of the last four years has produced noteworthy progress. Some of it was due to Christie. But much of what Christie has accomplished was done in concert with others. For example, Christie helped to push through an improved budget that raised education funding by $1.1 billion. Christie's proposal was part of an $8.7 billion budget compromise, which the Legislature eventually approved and Christie signed into law. In return, Democrats agreed to increased education spending, reduced school employee union costs, and increased funding for mental health programs. The reality is that the only single-term Republican governor in the nation this year was Chris Christie. Shortly before noon on November 3, the Republican Party of New Jersey was hit with a wave of negative publicity. The impact was immediate — from polls to the press, New Jersey was called the state that went to hell in a handbasket, and it was headed toward a GOP landslide. The damage continued. Seven GOP state Senate candidates lost their races,

The app currently doesn't work on Android. It is a very good app that I've downloaded a few times. I've never had it stop working on my phone but I didn't have it installed for long enough to get any good data on that matter. I agree with Dave Rob, it is $2.99. I also do not like Google's practice of "suggesting apps" when you click on the web search. Perhaps Google should suggest audio editing software instead of apps that may or may not give good results. The mobile app (Version 1.3) is currently available for Android and iOS operating systems. It requires ba244e880a
