I have a website that basically enables users to rate a song. I want to be able to have them download a zip file of the songs they've downloaded. The idea is that they're rating a song, click the "Download" button, and a zip file is saved to their desktop. I have the basic php and jquery working for uploading the file, but I want to do it the right way. I have a basic working jquery script that tries to download the file and it works perfectly. The issue is that it uses the file name from the database (songName) instead of the file name that is saved to the server. I'm having a little trouble figuring out how to get it to download the file that is actually being saved. This is my current jquery function: function downloadFile(songName){ $.ajax({ type: "POST", url: "song.php", data: {songName: songName}, success: function(msg) { alert("Download Complete"); download(songName); }
