Quadriceps femoris muscle thickness change in women with the use of creatine: a randomized clinical trial. It was hypothesized that creatine supplementation would increase quadriceps femoris muscle thickness. This study evaluated changes in the thickness of the biceps femoris and vastus lateralis muscles in creatine-supplemented women. A double-blind, randomized clinical trial was conducted to evaluate the effects of 8 weeks of creatine supplementation on quadriceps femoris muscle thickness. Ninety-eight physically active women [mean (SD) age 23.4 (4.6) yr, body mass index 22.6 (2.6) kg/m<sup>2</sup>] completed the trial. Muscle thicknesses of the biceps femoris and vastus lateralis were determined by B-mode ultrasonography. In addition, pre- and post-gastrocnemius muscle thicknesses were assessed by qualitative analysis of ultrasonography images. Creatine supplementation had no effect on quadriceps femoris muscle thickness or pre- or post-gastrocnemius thickness. Post-gastrocnemius thickness was greater in creatine-supplemented women than the control group (mean difference 0.30 cm, 95% CI 0.02-0.58,  $p = 0.037$ ). Creatine supplementation did not change quadriceps femoris muscle thickness. However, creatine supplementation increased gastrocnemius thickness. Future studies should evaluate the benefits of creatine supplementation for persons with reduced quadriceps femoris muscle thickness.
