Father Patrick Halpin was sacked by the Archdiocese of Sydney following a complaint by a mother who had sought his permission before she gave birth to a child with a non-Christian partner. The mother, who identified herself only as Rachel, said her partner had previously chosen to baptise his child under Catholic religious laws. But she said in the Catholic church Father Halpin had rebuffed her because she was not married. The priest told The Australian newspaper the decision was made in the "best interest of the child". "I have a very deep concern for anyone who is in my church and who has come to me and shared the question of their status and I have to act in their best interest," he said. "If a person was clearly of Jewish descent, I would suggest that it would be appropriate to involve a rabbi and their partner, and obviously their parents if they were still alive, to make a decision about whether they were baptised or not. "In all of those cases, it is up to the parent.

For; Imo the two are not mutually exclusive. It's a real concern. I'm not saying for one minute that I think my morality's as it should be. I don't care what they think but I want to be certain that my conduct is in line with the best standards.
