My reply: "It's not that I'm a bad driver, it's just I'm not a great driver. I'm not impatient, but I don't want to stop." ~~~ kingkongrevenge Very rarely have I seen a reason for a test of the limits of one's driving ability. Very rarely have I seen the sort of profligate driver behaviour you describe. ~~~ lacker I'm not saying that it's a reason for _the driver to be tested_. But when someone has the audacity to say, "I'm not a great driver, it's just that I'm not a bad driver", then they should be able to back it up. Maybe they'll turn out to be a great driver after all. But why not give them the opportunity? ~~~ kingkongrevenge My kids start driving in their teens. I just get out of the way. At that age if they hit something it's not my problem. I might have another child if they were too reckless. But there is a reason I don't get behind a bunch of kids on the freeway at 10AM with the windows down. ~~~ mattd I'll admit I have a blind spot on the right of my car. When my son was a bit younger, he had his first speeding ticket. I was in the right lane. He pulled in front of me and veered to the left in an attempt to pass. At the last second he got a glimpse of my car and saw me, but it was too late. When the cops wrote up the ticket, he told them he was driving and he didn't know what it was. They refused to believe him. I had to come to court and repeat that I was in the right lane. He was in the left lane. I ended up with a $750 ticket, and my son (who was nine at the time) was able to beat it, since he had no prior convictions. -----

Doing things "asynchronously" is not a solution for their problem. If it were a 2d92ce491b
