External links Category:AutodeskQ: How to install.NET Core on non-windows systems? I have already installed.NET Core on my pc with Windows. Today, I want to install it on my server with Linux. So I downloaded and installed.NET Core from their website. After installing.NET Core, I used dotnet --info to see if.NET Core is installed on my Linux server, and it is. I then ran dotnet new webapi to create a new webapi. And I see all the commands that I previously installed on my Windows machine. However, I don't see where to run dotnet new webapi? The Server-Side command line tool option in Visual Studio doesn't work. I do have Microsoft.AspNetCore.All nuget package installed on my server. I am thinking this is why I can't use the dotnet new webapi command to create a new webapi project. If I need to install.NET Core on Linux, can someone please help me? Thank you A: As other user posted, the dotnet new webapi command should be run from the directory with the project. I do have Microsoft.AspNetCore.All nuget package installed on my server. dotnet new webapi would need the project in the same directory as the nuget package e.g. dotnet new webapi myproject -c ~/projects/myproject I am thinking this is why I can't use the dotnet new webapi command to create a new webapi project. The command you posted is actually the command to create a new ASP.NET Core Web Application project You will need to specify the project type and the project name before dotnet new is executed dotnet new aspnetcore wouldn't work because there is no dotnet on your $PATH dotnet new webapi myproject -c ~/projects/myproject is the command to create a new ASP.NET Core Web API (i.e. "server-side") By Nightfall By Nightfall is the debut album by the Czech freestyle jazz band Spontanium, recorded in 1996 and released in 1997.
