For the most part, the study patients received recommended treatment. However, patients' adherence to treatment was not measured and may have affected the results. Finally, our study did not account for possible patients' self-report bias, which might have influenced the outcomes. 5. Conclusion =====

P-glycoprotein status is associated with both over- and under-estimation of vancomycin susceptibility, and the results are not interchangeable. In patients with no risk factors, P-glycoprotein-based prediction of vancomycin susceptibility is a useful tool, but the test does not reliably predict vancomycin treatment failures in high-risk populations.
