US.) Developmental neurotoxicity of benzo[a]pyrene: effects on brain serotonin systems. Benzo[a]pyrene (BP), a ubiquitous environmental contaminant, is known to be a potent immunosuppressor. Our previous studies have demonstrated that BP disrupts the developing central nervous system (CNS). In this study we investigated the effects of the prenatal exposure of rats to BP on serotonin (5-HT) systems. Pregnant Sprague-Dawley rats were given 500 ppm BP in their drinking water from day 9 of gestation to the end of lactation. BP-treated pups showed significant reductions in body weight at weaning, as well as morphological abnormalities in the nasal passages at 3 weeks of age. No significant changes in brain serotonin were observed at 9 days of age, but by 2 weeks of age, significantly lower levels of 5-HT were found in both the cerebral cortex and hippocampus. BP treatment from day 9 of gestation to weaning led to decreases in brain tissue levels of 5-HT in the cerebral cortex and hippocampus. These results confirm our previous findings and indicate that prenatal BP exposure may affect a developing brain region that is rich in serotonin pathways.

“There is only one solution to the economic crisis, and that is the solution that we need at the moment: a government that tells the whole truth, that does not fear the truth, does not fear telling the truth, and gives us all the tools to continue to build up our economy. If that means public spending in the first year of the next Parliament, then we have to do it. But it will be the first time in our history that there will be, by its very nature, a difference in our population. It will be the first time that we will have a country where there are people who are not in work and people who are in work. It
