It is a simple VBS script that allows you to easily activate Microsoft Office 2010 on computers running Windows. Use the script to activate an Office product on your PCs, resulting in the activation of more product licenses. Without this script, you need an activated product key to activate Office, but now you can activate more product keys without needing to activate the product yourself.Q: Accessing data from a service to a component/ngx-module I want to access data from a service into a component/ngx-module. The component is a sibling component of the one that contains the service. The component that holds the service and the sibling component that should get the data from the service are both children of a parent (app) component. Parent Component: const app = self.appRef.parent; app.parentService.getData().subscribe( data => this.serviceData = data, error => console.log(error) ); Component that should get the data: @Component({ selector: 'app-update', templateUrl: './update.component.html', styleUrls: ['./update.component.scss'] }) export class UpdateComponent implements OnInit { constructor(private _updateService: UpdateService) { } ngOnInit() { this._updateService.getData(); } } The problem is that when I call this._updateService.getData(), nothing is returned, but when I write app.parentService.getData(), everything works fine. I tried this, and it did not work either: const updateService: UpdateService = this.parentService.parentService; updateService.getData().subscribe(data => this.data=data); But this works: const updateService: UpdateService = this.parentService.parentService; this.updateService.getData().subscribe(data => this.data=data); Why is it so? Can someone explain this to me? 3da54e8ca3
