Category:Textbooks by type[The mechanisms of immunological impairment in the patients in the early phase of diabetic nephropathy]. The mechanisms of developing and progression of diabetic nephropathy has been studied. The study group consisted of 32 patients with type II diabetes mellitus and nephropathy without clinical signs of scleroderma, within 1.5-3.0 years after the onset of renal injury. In the patients renal biopsy was performed, immunological and biochemical investigations were conducted. The following immunological parameters were determined: levels of IgG, IgM, IgA, IgE, IgG subclasses (G1, G2, G3), complement (C3, C4, CH50), circulating immune complexes (CIC), eosinophil cationic protein (ECP) in serum. The following biochemical parameters were evaluated: concentration of albumin and creatinine, urine creatinine and protein excretion, renal blood flow, plasma angiotensin converting enzyme activity. The study showed that the most important immunological abnormality in patients with diabetic nephropathy was reduced serum levels of IgA and IgG subclasses, reduced concentration of C3, and elevated CH50. IgM was found to be elevated only in patients with diabetic nephropathy. Among the patients with IgG hypogammaglobulinaemia, the predominant immunoglobulinopathy was IgA deficiency.The Voice of the Netherlands The Voice of the Netherlands (also referred to as De Nederlandse Omroep, abbreviated as NOO) is the public service radio station of the Netherlands.
