Answer: 1) Once the host server needs to create or already has a replication site, install a nonclustered replica or use NoClone for the database Âto enable automatic failover. Choose Replication for Replication Storage ArchitectureÂÂ. 2) The first 3 use the same default settings as the SQL Server Management Studio (SSMS) local system properties (System Properties > Shared Db Connection Parameters). For all 3, do the following: Â1.Ensure the SQL Server instance name and authentication method for the local system property match the server name and authentication method of the server that will host the database. Create Database in Replication Site 3) On the Replication Server that will host the database, right-click the database, and then click New Replication Site. If the database already has a replication site, specify this site when you create the new site. For more information, see SQL Server Replication: Creating and Managing Replication Sites (SQL Server Books Online). 3) Follow steps 2 through 4 on the Replication Server that will host the database. If a failure occurs, the database will automatically fail over to the site that is currently running. ÂExisting WINS and HTTP host names will be ignored if they point to a site that is not currently running. You must configure a replication site for each site that is listening on a host name (WINS or HTTP) or you cannot create databases. 1) On the server where you want to create the database, use the Windows Authentication method to connect to the database server. You can use the local system account and do not have to create a domain user account. Create Database in Replication Site Create Database 2) If the site already exists when you create the
