Q: How to get a new java process to use a specific library? I have a Java application that has a dependency on some libraries not present on the user's machine. How can I get the java process to always load the dependency's JAR files on startup? I'm trying to do this with the command line switch -D option, but the problem is it's trying to access JAR files in the JDK, not a specific library location, for example: C:\Users\user\jdk-9\lib\tools.jar I know I can modify the classpath, but the library I need to load isn't something I can change it's location to, and I don't want to get into the hassle of modifying my dependencies manually, which I believe is what the Java JDK tool will do if I use it's CLI. If I need to change this behavior with the Java environment, I would want to be able to do this without the need to have the dependency's JAR files present on my machines, I'm trying to avoid having a group of people have to always install the dependency on each machine they use.

A: Use a startup script. Create a text file named launch-local.sh with the following contents: `#!/bin/bash JAR=C:/Users/user/jdk-9/lib/tools.jar java -Djava.library.path=${JAR} myClass` Create a text file named myClass with the following contents: `public class MyClass { public static void main(String[] args) { System.out.println("Hello World!"); } }` Place launch-local.sh into your /home/username/.java-home/bin directory. Run `java -Djava.library.path=${JAR} myClass` to create your jar dependency. MyClass.class will be saved to the JAR file, allowing it to be
