This review is based on the Windows version of Luminance HDR 8.4 released on December 14, 2014. (So what's new with this version? – New and more intuitive user interface, – New batch mode, – Support for DCR file format (– Support for Canon EOS 6D (– Support for Fujifilm X-E1 (– Support for Pentax K20D (– Support for Pentax K-5 II (– Support for Nikon D4S (So, one of the possible reasons for the new interface is due to the new metadata format of the Canon EOS 6D, that's why the new interface is more intuitive and easier to use. Now, we are going to look at Luminance HDR technical details. What's new? So let's start with the biggest new feature of the application. This is the new batch mode. At the beginning of Luminance HDR version 8, there was the ability to create folders and organize the images. Well, this new feature solves that problem in a better way. By using the new batch mode, you can open multiple files in Lumineance HDR at once and save them all under a single JPEG, TIFF or PNG. To use the new batch mode, go to the Options → General menu and check the box → Enable Batch mode. How many files can be imported at the same time? At the moment you can open and save eight images in a single batch operation. There is no definite limit for the number of files you can import and export in a single batch, but it's recommended to keep the limit as low as possible. The reason is that the application opens a preview of the images after they are imported.

What's New in the Luminance HDR?
