The application was specifically designed to open eBooks and its features can be summarized as follows: Enables to import a batch of eBooks into the library Simple to use interface Editable notes Bookmarks Text highlight Options to change the font size and the line spacing Automated text translation more about as Kindle!!! A: I use Adobe Digital Editions with my iPad. I just created an eBook as a side project in the morning and finished it in the afternoon. I downloaded the free version and haven't looked back. It works well on iOS 5.0 and 5.1. If you use iTunes to synchronize your iPhone/iPod touch/iPad, the eBook should synchronize automatically after you finish downloading it. If you have problems with this, be sure to set your iPad to not automatically back up to iTunes

(Settings > iCloud). A: I'm a fan of iBooks myself and recommend it, but with some caveats. You can open books in the app if you'd like with a free Apple ID and you have their product (iPod touch or iPhone) or Mac OS X. However, you cannot actually buy any books this way and it's not really a huge problem since most eBooks are free anyway. Additionally, iBooks has a special feature for exporting your content to PDF or EPUB. You can save it and read the book on any other system or eReader. It's fun for sharing with other users if you want to write a book together and see it in virtual reality (or maybe share the PDF with a friend). The downside is that you can't buy content this way (unless you pay $9.99 for a "stub") and the content stored in iBooks does not sync with other devices. Q: Getting this error while execute simple script (popen) Perl script will help me install and configure the Microsoft FTP account which contain the username, pwd and IP address of my computer. This is what I have written: #!/usr/bin/perl use strict; use warnings; use Getopt::Long; my $getopt=GetOptions('user:s' => \my $user, 09e8f5149f
