TickTick (for Windows) is not a fully featured email client, but rather an efficient way to organize your email in a nice, clean, and fast manner. It's quite simple, but it's effective. It also supports IMAP, supports various mail hosts, and allows you to rearrange the interface to your liking. Furthermore, TickTick supports a simple algorithm for sorting emails by frequency or length. This helps cut down on spam and prevents you from having to read through all of your emails. Every single word you type is a precious gem, or rather gold to your Internet, so that's why you want to keep it organized, in neat and healthy boxes, that's exactly what this inbox organizer app does. It's based on a neat theory, it builds boxes that open by default when you start writing, and use your own words as "tags" so you can easily find the messages you need. What's even better about it, is that it quickly removes the irrelevant ones, reducing the clutter and making your life a bit less busy. A dead simple yet powerful email client. Fast, easy to use and light. Lots of options for customization, bookmarking, and tags. Highly rated, recommended! If you are looking for an easy to use and get things done email client, then I would highly recommend you try one of these applications: A simple and effective email client with a small interface and few options for configuring it. However, it is still very well-suited for efficiently monitoring a few different email accounts. Creates boxes that are organized by type
