Donate a dollar now to support ihiphop:Patreon for artist and artwork. I recently had the pleasure of helping my friend, the New Orleans rapper/producer/musician Haze who was recently signed to VEVO's Big Baby D. Click here to follow Haze on Twitter. Check out his VEVO channel here. You'll see my logo and link, but I'm not affiliated with Haze in any way. In this video, I talk about the basics of beat making as well as some basic theory on breaks, timbres and layering. Want to know how to do lofi drums? Got questions about plug in techniques, eq and compression? You know, all that usual cool stuff about making music? Here's the link to the wider tutorial video. You'll see me using Ableton Live, as well as using a software instrument called the Kontakt Player. As well as the soft synth that I've used to layer my breaks in. This tutorial is going to be a bit of a talk through. Although I've aimed it toward beginners, the subject is open and can be applied to many topics. I hope you enjoy! Thank you so much for watching, and thank you to Haze for giving me the opportunity to speak on this subject. The 'B.H.' in the title stands for beat; the 'I' stands for instrument; the 'T' stands for Timbre; the 'L' stands for Layer; and the 'P' stands for Performance. There are other important elements to this subject, but they're all interrelated. So hopefully this tutorial will help give you a starting point for your journey into this universe. For those of you interested in hardware equipment, I recommend the audio box, the Presonus Studio 21 or 24, a good mic and good headphones. But of course, if you have the bankroll, go in whatever crazy gear will help you get better. Let's get started. So the first thing we need to do is to find our 'rhythm' or 'beat'. To do this, I'm going to use the first beat of one of my favorite tunes. It's by Milkwood, and it's called 'Sweetest Thing'. It's a great song; you should check it out. Ok, so the first thing to do is to make sure that the song is set to syncop

The hidden costs of homeopathy. Public health professionals are clearly out to lunch when they try to explain the bizarre nature of homeopathy, it almost seems as if they are trying to. Homeopathy is a deliberate practice on the part of the homeopath to induce a specific disease in a given patient, allowing its treatment. Homeopathy from the other side of the mirror! The Guardian We also consume some food that in some cases contain preservatives or other additives not normally found in nature. For example, we eat food additives that are intended to make our food taste better. These additives are usually called flavor enhancers. For example, bananas are often colored with colorants, and chicken is often flavored. Some types of food like candies or beverages are often made with sweeteners like sucrose or refined sugars. Homeopathy is a deliberate practice on the part of the homeopath to induce a specific disease in a given patient, allowing its treatment. Homeopathy, a term which literally means, is a system of healing which originated in a book written by the German physician Samuel Hahnemann in. Partly as a reaction to the work of the German physician Franz Mesmer in the 18th century, Hahnemann published The Organon of the Medical Art (, lit. The Organon of the Medical Art") in which he stated that disease could be cured by causing a physiological crisis, by a means of association of medicines on the principle of the "materia medica" (LMHB/IMHK). Hahnemann claimed that the disease which the disease is caused is not necessarily the disease of the patient, but the disease of the patient at the time of the presentation. This means that the state of being ill that the patient is experiencing, would be the disease. Hahnemann is seen by most homeopaths as the father of the subject. Hahnemann coined the term "homoeopathy" to mean "same illness treated with medicines of same power" and "similar dose a like disease". He coined the term "homeopathy" (from Latin homo, meaning "same" and pathos, meaning "suffering" or "illness") to mean "to treat illness with same illness". He stated that "like cures like", thus the idea of similarity in cure was his premise. It is believed that the term "homo" came from the work of Erasmus Darwin, on the basis of a homology 3e33713323
