The present invention relates to an encoder, and in particular to an encoder suitable for use in a video signal encoder/decoder. An encoder is used in video signal encoders and decoders to compress video signals so as to reduce the required storage space and/or to reduce the bandwidth requirement in transmission of the video signals. A problem is that the complexity of the encoder is generally only linear in the number of lines in the input video signal. Thus, it is difficult to increase the complexity of the encoder by increasing the line count for a television signal. A second problem is that the encoder requires a large number of hardware counters in order to count the number of lines in the input video signal. In order to overcome the above problems it is known to use an encoder capable of creating frames of a required number of lines. In such an encoder it is desirable to create the frames with a number of lines equal to the number of lines in the input video signal. According to the invention there is provided an encoder comprising an input sample-and-hold circuit, a line counter, a frame generation circuit, a decoder and an output sample-and-hold circuit, the sample-and-hold circuit being used to hold an input sample signal, the line counter being used to count the number of input lines held by the sample-and-hold circuit during a line cycle, the frame generation circuit being used to generate a frame of a predetermined number of lines, and the decoder being used to de-multiplex the frame of the predetermined number of lines to obtain decoded samples.
