A decreased CD4+/CD8+ ratio (CD4/CD8) in the peripheral blood of sarcoidosis patients has been found in several studies but this has not been verified using flow cytometric analysis. To further investigate this, we measured CD4+ and CD8+ T cell populations in patients with biopsy-proved sarcoidosis and analysed them with the conventional gating system for flow cytometry. In our study, the number of CD4+ cells was significantly decreased in the peripheral blood of these patients. Our findings are consistent with those of the previous studies. However, we were not able to observe decreased CD8+ cell numbers in our study. To determine whether flow cytometry can analyse all populations of lymphocytes, and can also discriminate CD4+ and CD8+ cells, we also measured CD4+ and CD8+ cell numbers in each cell population in the blood. We observed decreased CD4/CD8 ratios in each cell population of patients with sarcoidosis, suggesting that the decreased ratio is not the result of decreased CD4+ and CD8+ cell numbers. We conclude that sarcoidosis patients suffer from a decreased CD4/CD8 ratio in the peripheral blood, and this may be the cause of the disorders of cellular immunity

The gene's mutation in zebrafish suggests that human and zebrafish stem cell lineages differ in how the gene influences stem cell differentiation. he had enough of that for a lifetime. It was his own fault he was a gangster. He was perhaps the best product of his upbringing, but the education of the gangsters in youth and study were scarce. The world of pleasure was going to make for a very dull and uninteresting life. As I was setting out again, I imagined what the years to come would be like. I'd be sixty. I'd be sitting in the sauna bathing, getting sunburned and reading at the same time. At home in my apartment, I'd be having a beer and enjoying a quiet life. At the sauna in the club, I'd be talking with the other men, and, naturally, they'd be talking about the future, which they were grateful for, as they'd be getting old. They were, in the meantime, just enjoying it, as my generation did things in their youth. If the young men sitting there had done things as I had, they'd have been happy. I'd be sad. Very sad, as I really like life.
