Though, only I and I alone can tell if this is something that I do or it is a known bug in Microsoft Windows and it is just a coincidence. In all other forums on the Internet, I have never experienced anything like this. I hope you will find this information helpful. So far, I have had no problems with my Firefox 2.0 Beta 1 (final). I have been using this program to organize my bookmarks for a while, but

If you are a power user of Windows who uses a lot of Hotkeys, you will probably use your Windows environment for a lot of things. But if you use a Hotkey to access your favorite Web sites, you might run into the problem that you can't find the site you've just typed into the browser. You'll end up having to type the URL in the navigation box. And sometimes you'll accidentally type a URL that you didn't intend to type. What JetLinks will do is scan through the current "bookmarks" for your browser and if it finds a matching URL, it will take it out of your bookmarks and replace it with the one in the program. JetLinks supports multiple databases for the bookmarks. You can choose between a database with XML files or just a list of files. The program will scan through all files and if it finds a match, it will replace the bookmark with the new one. The URL can be downloaded in two different formats. One is the plain text format that JetLinks can handle easily. The other is an HTML file that JetLinks can save the link to and display it on the screen. This is a simple program that allows you to add URLs, links and bookmarks for you to use easily, and it's very easy to use. So if you want to free up some of the space in your browser bookmarks, give this program a try.
