Literary Criticism To Build A Fire

Download

Formalist Criticism Jack London's short story "Build a Fire" is about a man who travels through the Yukon desert. His mission was to return to civilization and earn money for his mother, who was completely impoverished. But the hero of the story, in the end, is forced to spend the winter in the camp, where he knows no other occupation than hunting seals, fishing and cooking. He is apparently dying of hunger and cold despite all the efforts he makes to survive. Jack London's story ends with the words: "He was like an animal struggling for life in the endless expanse of the desert."
