Judging by everything that defines it, Tweet My Stream is definitely an application for radio producers who are seeking for a quick and effortless approach to advertise their product. It steps in with a simple design and although the presence of eye candying elements is scarce, its appearance doesn't bother the eye. The GUI is organized in such a way, that you don't need a help manual in order to understand its ins and outs. First and foremost, before you even think about tweeting anything, you must authorize your Twitter account, which is a short and very intuitive process. It's recommendable to perform a quick check in the browser to see if the tweets are being posted automatically. It worked just fine during our tests, with absolutely no delay and what's more, each time a new song was being played, it posted the changes right away. Alternatively, there is the possibility to tweet texts and links that have nothing to do with the radio stream, which means it also functions as a normal Twitter client when you need it to. The tweet history is logged and displayed inside the main window, where you will also find a volume adjuster for the playback process. If we haven't mentioned it before, yes, it also features a built-in player for the live streams. On an ending note, Tweet My Stream could prove to be a very fortunate choice if you're in the radio industry. Seeing as social networks are the future, such an application might be a game changer.
