Although it's free to use, you can purchase a subscription to full version of Photoshop as well. ## Drawing The _drawing_ tools in Photoshop do not generally produce finished art. Instead, they are for drawing simple objects or text, using some of the most basic shapes as templates, on a blank canvas or layer. You can then proceed to paint and apply layers and effects on the layers to create a finished piece of art. Figure 7-9 shows the various tools available, and you can view a live example of one of the drawing tools in action at `www.PhotoshopSupport.com/tutorials/uselab/index.php`. Comparison of Photographic Method of Assessing the Airway for the Prediction of Type of Mandibular Fracture: CBCT or CT? The aim of this study was to compare the accuracy of three-dimensional (3D) computed tomography (CT) and cone beam computed tomography (CBCT) for the assessment of airway for predicting the type of mandibular fracture. The study included 32 cadaver mandibles (18 male and 14 female, 26-87 years old) from Anatomy Department and Oral & Maxillofacial Department. There were 12 left and 20 right sides. Type of mandibular fracture was classified according to Young and Burgess classification. The distance from mandibular angle and occlusal plane to mandibular canal was assessed on oblique CT and CBCT images, separately, as parameters of 3D airway analysis. The height, length, and angle of the mandibular canal in the true airway were assessed. From oblique CT images airway measurements for the right and left sides were on average significantly larger in type III than in type I (mean ± SD: 206 ± 31 mm and 167 ± 36 mm, p Q: Rails routes - how to handle the page name only in the URL i am looking to create a new RESTful API using ruby on rails The only thing I want to make sure is that the name of my route is something like mydomain.com/getData/pagename, because this way I can identify which pagename I am looking for my urls Here is what I have so far: routes.rb Rails.application.routes.draw do root'main#home' resources :main get '/test', :to => 'test#show' end this is

The regulation of gene expression and cell growth are interrelated and dependent processes. One important regulator of gene expression is p53, a nuclear phosphoprotein which when phosphorylated can activate transcription of genes which regulate apoptosis and growth arrest. A consistent mutational pattern is observed in a variety of human cancers in a region of the gene encoding the carboxy-terminal regulatory domain of p53 (p53CDS) and this site is frequently associated with p53 mutations in human tumors. The p53CDS includes a nuclear localization signal, a negative charge region, a putative Zn-finger motif, two proline-rich regions, a basic domain and the regulatory domain. Several distinct regions of the p53CDS have been suggested to be important for the regulation of p53 function. The region between amino acids 275 and 395 (p53CDS275-395) contains a specific zinc-finger motif, two proline-rich regions and three basic regions. We have shown that the zinc finger motif is required for p53 function in vivo, the two proline-rich regions are required for p53-dependent growth arrest, and the three basic domains are required for p53-mediated transcriptional activity. Our data also suggest that the region between amino acids 275 and 395 contains sequences that allow for dimerization of p53. The goal of the proposed research is to precisely define the sequence requirements for dimerization of p53, and to investigate the role of this property in regulating p53 function. The hypothesis to be tested is that sequences in the region between amino acids 275 and 395 are critical for regulating p53 function. The Specific Aims of the project are: AIM 1) To generate mutants which will distinguish between direct protein/protein interaction and indirect effects of the p53CDS on p53 function; AIM 2) To determine the relative contribution of the basic regions and proline-rich regions of the p53CDS in regulating p53 function; and AIM 3) To determine the functional domains required for dimerization of p53. These experiments are important for defining the mechanism by which p53 regulates gene expression, and for understanding why mutant p53 proteins are associated with cancer.Association between polymorphisms in a functional domain of the estrogen receptor gene and early-onset breast cancer. Early-onset breast cancer (EOBC) is an important risk factor for women with breast cancer. The ER alpha gene is a major gene that can influence tumorigenesis
