Q: Converting HTML form variables to a MySQL database I'm using an HTML form that has a dropdown menu that my PHP page receives. My HTML file looks like this: Sex Male Female My PHP script will receive this information and add it to the database. I'm trying to figure out how to take this information from my HTML file and store it in a variable. It's a simple thing, I just can't think of the terminology to search for. Here is the PHP code from my website: Records Added; } ?> It receives the information, but I can't get it to add it to the database. A: Your problem is with your SQL statement. You're using double quotes around Sqery, so the SQL statement is being interpreted as: INSERT INTO users(name, age, hobby, area) VALUES('.....') When you want: INSERT INTO users(name, age, hobby, area) VALUES('.....') He has been spied on for over a decade, lied to, his rights violated, his emails been hacked by the CIA, he has been isolated, threatened, and so on. Over the past 10 years that he has been through it, he has only had one result of the spy agency being removed from his life. He hasn't heard from it for the past 10 years. In the mid-2000s, my friend worked for a small company with about 25 employees. The spy agency found out about him and was threatening him with a long drawn out career ending nightmare. I've known him for over a decade, and since I know him, I've known him to be a patriotic, honest, hard working, responsible, and moral person. In the early 2000s, the spying began, my friend left, then
