- Check the details of your broadband connection
- Manage your web sites

BT Watcher Pro supports Internet Explorer, Firefox, Opera, Chrome, Apple Safari and many other web browsers. It doesn't happen often, but it does happen. A hacker now has the power to completely take over your computer and steal everything you store, including passwords, credit card numbers, and even your banking and personal information. The bad news is, you can't do much to stop them. The good news is, you can do a little to make sure it doesn't happen to you. In this How-to, you'll learn the best way to protect yourself and your sensitive information.

- * How to Protect Yourself From Hackers
- * Types of Hackers
- * Types of Malware
- * Protection Techniques

Step 1 - Know What Your Computer Can Do The first step to protecting yourself is to know what your computer can do and what it can do to you. This is where you need to start.

Step 2 - Identify Your System The next step to protecting yourself is to identify what operating system you use and where it can be found.

Step 3 - Check Your System Software Next, make sure that you have the latest operating system and software updates. What it does is it will scan your computer for outdated software, outdated drivers, and outdated security patches.

Step 4 - Define the User You will also need to define what is or isn't the user of your computer. This is important because each user has a separate account on your computer. So if one person uses a different computer, the computer that that person uses may also be a threat to the other computers.

Step 5 - Check the Software on Your Network The final step in protecting yourself is to check the software on your network. Why? Well, if you are at a place of work, it is possible that you have connections with other computers or systems that are owned by someone else. These systems may have their 77a5ca646e
