Ink2Go is an easy-to-use and versatile screen recorder and annotation tool. It helps you add annotations to your desktop screen and record your screen activity as an MP4 file. What's New in Version 2.4: Update: Splash Screen Update: Send Recording To A Email Address Note: This is a freeware version. The full version of this program is available to download from Some things aren't meant to be shared with your business contacts. Instead, you'll use Internet Explorer, a program that you installed on your own machine. All of those contacts are your own, not a commercial company's, and they won't be able to access your company's network or other computers on your network. The internet wasn't designed for people to share things with each other. That would be like talking on the telephone. The best thing you can do is a screen share, or a live video conference between people who are on the same network. Since you'll be using the Internet, all of the people you talk to will be using the same version of a browser program, like Microsoft Internet Explorer. There are two ways to do a screen share. One is by asking the other person to run a program on his computer. Another is by using a free internet service program that lets you do the same thing. To do a screen share with someone on the same network, ask them to download a free screen sharing program. At the same time, you need to get a free version of the same program on your computer. If the person on the other end is using Internet Explorer, you can get this from your browser software company. Most of the time, you can get free Internet Explorer screen sharing software from the manufacturer. If not, you'll have to get a free program from an internet service provider. You'll use a different word for the connection. Instead of cable modem, you'll say dialup. Other free services for screen sharing that you can get are From.com and GoToMeeting. Both offer free accounts. The free internet service providers are companies that offer you free dialup, or a free email account, if you want. They may give you a free screen sharing program and a free login to that program. You can be connected to someone else who is on a different internet service provider. If the person is a
