You will be able to control the generated code that your Visual Studio projects are created using the RIAGenerator. Using RIAGenerator you are able to customize the output generated by the Visual Studio RIA/Silverlight generator. "I think that RIAGenerator will make your RIA development more professional" At the beginning of the project, you will need to add a package reference to RIAGenerator. This will be done in the Visual Studio Solution Explorer, in the Package Reference area, right click the reference > add reference > RIAGenerator. When you run the code it will do a lot of work to generate the initial model. It will generate the InitialDataSource, ViewModel and client-code for all your entities. RIAGenerator is a utility developed in WPF that helps a development team to control and customize the generated code in a RIA-based application. RIAGenerator uses the same generator as Visual Studio to generate the "Generated_Code" (CSharpClientCodeGenerator). Description: You will be able to control the generated code that your Visual Studio projects are created using the RIAGenerator. I also came across this tool. I wanted to know how I could customize the output for my WPF project. I found the file ClientGenerator.cs in the solution which is used for creating the views and the view models. However it seems to be in a state of beta. I found that I can add some properties in the ClientGenerator.cs in the constructor and set the generated project to use them. How do I customize the templates for these client-generated files so that they have the logic in the view model and view.Muscle fatigue: a major determin
