You'll find: – All templates – Flash templates – E-mail templates – Project files in various formats (PS, HTML, etc.) – Code with comments for easy editing – Graphics in EPS, PDF, SVG, PSD, GIF, and PNG formats – Folder with sample code and fonts Dos & Don'ts of Icon Design: When it comes to icons, the dos and don'ts are simple. But as with anything else, some icons are better than others. DO make it big and bold. This means putting the text on a large background, and keeping the font's largest size. If you're creating icons for your own website, or for use with software you're creating, the text should be the dominant element of the icon. And never use more than two colors. If your icon has more than two colors, all of the colors should be used equally. DO make the text white. The web is a sea of gray, so your icons should look like they're part of the web. A dark background with white text is a good start. DON'T make the text small. The default size of web icons is 48 pixels. If your text is less than 48 pixels, it will disappear off the edge of the icon, and your work will be ruined. DON'T use texture. If you use texture to make the background of your icons, you'll find that they'll look a lot better if you then take them away. Texture takes away from the visual harmony. The best icons are those that don't look like they've been pasted in. DON'T use shadows. If you want your icons to be a little more pleasing to the eye, don't use shadows. They're really the last thing you want to add to your icon. Instead, make the icon bigger, and brighter. DO use a transparent background. This is just a trick, and there are good reasons why people do it. The first reason is
