Clinical significance of ventricular fibrillation induced by autonomic nervous stimulation in patients with coronary artery disease and left ventricular dysfunction: comparison between long-term monitoring with a defibrillation electrode and conventional defibrillation. Defibrillation efficacy is impaired in patients with coronary artery disease (CAD) and left ventricular dysfunction (LVD), including survivors of out-of-hospital cardiac arrest. This study was conducted to evaluate the efficacy of ventricular fibrillation (VF) induction by sympathetic stimulation, as a surrogate of sympathetic tone in CAD patients with LVD, and compare it with the efficacy of conventional defibrillation. The defibrillation efficacy of sympathetic stimulation was examined in 16 CAD patients and 12 LVD patients. In all patients, VF induction was performed by repeated supramaximal stimulation of the right vagus nerve (cervical stimulation). The effect of right vagal stimulation on VF induction was then evaluated in the CAD group. The efficacy of conventional defibrillation was tested in 14 CAD patients. The safety and efficacy of left cervical sympathetic stimulation in 16 CAD patients and 12 LVD patients were also evaluated. The incidence of VF was high in CAD patients and LVD patients (67.6% and 75.0%, respectively). The efficacy of sympathetic stimulation was lower in CAD patients than in LVD patients (81.8% vs. 97.7%). The efficacy of conventional defibrillation was also lower in CAD patients than in LVD patients (65.6% vs. 91.7%). However, there was no difference in the efficacy of sympathetic stimulation between CAD patients and LVD patients. In addition, left cervical sympathetic stimulation was also effective in CAD patients with LVD. Sympathetic stimulation is useful for VF induction in CAD patients and LVD patients. Sympathetic stimulation-induced VF has the same efficacy as conventional defibrillation, but it does not contribute to ventricular defibrillation.The invention pertains to a method for cooling and feeding an electromagnetic iron working tool, the tool being provided with a hard tool body and a hard tool insert, the hard tool insert being inserted into an aperture in the hard tool body in a press fit. The invention also pertains to a cooling and feeding device for the above-described tool, and to a hard tool insert as well as to a hard tool body.
