The purpose of this study was to investigate the effects of thermal shrinkage on the mechanical behavior of the Cr-Co-W heat-activated alloy used in orthodontic wires. The mechanical properties of the heat-activated alloy were first characterized by tensile tests, and the temperature dependency of the alloy properties was evaluated. The effects of high-temperature (1500 degrees C) heat treatment on the mechanical properties of the as-cast alloy and the standard Ni-Cr alloy (Cerabone) were compared. Subsequently, heat-treated and standard Ni-Cr alloy were placed in an Ar gas furnace and heat-activated at a high temperature (900 degrees C). Subsequently, the mechanical properties of the heat-activated specimens were characterized. The mechanical properties of the heat-activated alloy were found to be superior to those of Ni-Cr alloy regardless of the temperature at which heat treatment was applied. In addition, the small residual stress following high-temperature heat treatment leads to an increase in tensile strength and decrease in tensile elongation.The bill, which was introduced by Representative Brian Moran Brian Kilmeade, Kevin McCarthy, and Mario Diaz-Balart, never made it to the floor of the House of Representatives but could see its beginnings
