President Obama is planning to announce at least 12 candidates for the position of president of the Federal Housing Finance Agency, a position that becomes vacant in May when Martin J. Gruenberg steps down. Obama picked former Senior Treasury official Mel Watt to be his choice for the FHFA post, and former Treasury official Franklin D. Raines was named to take Gruenberg's place as FHFA's acting president. The FHFA oversees Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, two giant mortgage companies that were rescued by the government in 2008, and have been operating under a conservatorship for more than two years. Raines now serves as FHFA's special adviser to the agency on housing finance policy.Q: Google.maps.places.Autocomplete warning When using the Autocomplete service Google returns an error. An organization is not a machine that can perform the same task repeatedly; rather, it is people empowered to choose how they will work. Today we are going to discuss what learning happens in the classroom and how learning happens in a teaching place. This means we are going to discuss the school as a learning institution. As a learning institution, a school is structured not just around teaching, but learning. Learner-centered learning model: Think of the school as a learning institution where the learners are the center. The learning has to be viewed holistically. Teachers have to construct their learning environment around the needs of the learners. The most dominant role of the school in the learning process is to do the following: Provide a conducive environment for learning Infuse knowledge and engage the students Enable the students to think, reflect and apply their knowledge A learning organization: The school is a learning organization. The school is a place where students engage in deep, continuous learning. As a place of learning, the school is not just concerned with the learning of the students, but the learning of the staff as well. The school is built around learning. Learning happens through the interaction of the students and the teachers 3e33713323
