Moral Response by the LIC used to ensure that the control charts are reproduced. The chart presents the cumulative count of cases of injury. The number of cases displays the actual number of injuries reported by the LICs and the number of injuries that have Fallacy Beam width The width of the beam that is being tested. The beam itself is an opaque shield. Typically the width is in metres. Test set The set of tests that were used to test the beams. A test set consists of one or more test beams that are not part of the design. This is to allow investigation of the effect of environmental conditions. For example, rain might alter the strength of the beam, or wind speed could affect the loading on the beam. Test data The data collected by the test set. The data may include the beam's performance in the field or measurement of its environmental factors. For example, a meteorological station may record the wind speed at the time of the testing. Test A test on an element. The test result is measured against a set standard or design. The measurement is the result of the application of a load on the beam, the type of strain gauge attached to the beam, or some other test. The test could be used in a laboratory, wind tunnel, computer program, or on the field. If the test result is satisfactory, a test item may be chosen for production. Variant Although not strictly an argument, in arguments containing variants, a variant is a modification that affects the basis of the argument.
