To implement a structured routine, to measure the obstetric morbidity in the department, and to serve as a basis for further development. Transcription of the medical and nursing records for all patients delivered at the department during 2003-2004. By manual review of medical records, the period before and after birth was divided into eight stages of labour. From the nursing records, the phases of labour and the three highest stages in minutes were registered. In the Swedish model, the stage of active management of delivery (AMED) is defined as a sign of increasing labour pain and pressure applied to the birth canal. In this article, the term AMED-pain is used. In 2004, there were 106 women delivering in the department. Thirty-six (34%) women had AMED-pain during pregnancy, and 55 (52%) women experienced AMED-pain during labour. The frequency of amniotomy in 2004 was 120/1000 deliveries. Of the 90 women who had AMED-pain during labour, 35 (38.8%) had a cervical score 3e33713323
