20 million-plus PCs to get Silverlight 3 in April A while back we told you Microsoft was planning to develop a new version of Silverlight to address some of the complaints that have been levelled at the current (and pretty bad) package. Well that version is now due to come out on April 6th in the hope that it will fix things up and keep Microsoft's dream of developing applications for the Windows desktop into the far future alive. The release timetable has now been confirmed - Silverlight 3 will be available in April 2008. "At the close of 2007, we will deliver a new version of Silverlight that addresses many of the requirements identified by the developer community. Silverlight 3 is scheduled for release on April 6, 2008," said a statement released today. According to reports, Microsoft intends to drop the embedded Silverlight technology seen in the beta versions of Windows 7, Vista and Windows Server 2008. It is believed that Silverlight 3 will be available on the OSR, Windows Mobile, Windows XP and Windows Server 2003, but will not come with Vista. Happy Monday! Hope you had a wonderful weekend. I'm a little bit late, didn't want to do something in a rush... Anyway, this week's layout fits perfectly with our celebration of Valentine's Day. Remember when I told you that I'm going to post the photos from our special Valentine's dinner at the end of the month? Yeah... I forgot to post the layout using them! I used Plunge Studios image "A Happy Valentine's Day," Plunge Studios hearts "For You", and "For You" flowers (Ladies Day by Technique Tuesday). I thought the leaves and flowers were perfect for our theme. I'm still working on my postcard project. It takes so long to perfect all of the details, especially when you're trying to make it so pretty and also fit the guidelines for the postal service! They do not allow tiny lettering to be on the front. No, that's too adorable... Here's a mini postcard I made for myself. I had too much fun with the fonts and the background paper I used to make a custom card for myself. Hello and welcome to a new weekly project! For this week's project I used a brand new layout kit.

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.5.1)?

Directly programmed software-based dynamic aperture correction for in-line phase-contrast x-ray phase-plate tomography. Measurement of the x-ray source-to-sample phase-contrast signal with the use of an x-ray phase plate typically results in beam hardening artifacts. These artifacts can be modified using an extended (typically zero-absorber) sample window. Traditional phase-contrast x-ray (PCXRT) sample windows are not dynamically programmable and can suffer from reduction of the acquisition window due to limitations associated with the exposure time. We present a direct-programmable dynamic aperture correction approach to x-ray imaging that enables in-line phase-contrast PCXRT and can be used as an in situ correction algorithm to address beam hardening artifacts. The sample window is demodulated into its direct and coupled intensities using a computer-generated hologram (CGH) and a phase-modulated Gaussian reference beam, with adjustable phase difference of the reference beam compared to the sample window. The CGH and reference beam are coupled into the x-ray beam using a Fresnel zone plate. The sample is placed in a custom-designed sample holder that can be dynamically translated in the x-ray beam. Commercially available x-ray tube drivers are used to drive the source and capture the diffraction signal at the image plane. We demonstrate the approach using a beam hardening-free pair of x-ray sources-based illumination and a similar demodulation approach. Using an imaging CGH, we estimate the direct and coupled signal contributions to demonstrate the approach. Phantom and in vitro imaging experiments are performed to validate the approach. Finally, we present a study of the imaging performance and capabilities of the directly programmed dynamic-aperture correction (PDDAC) approach. 370 S.E.2d 862 (1988) 87 N.C.
