SeaClear Crack + Torrent Free

SeaClear is a handy program designed to help you plan a sea trip with multiple stops around the world. With a GPS connected it displays the current position, speed, heading and other data on the screen. The chart is repositioned and new charts are loaded automatically as needed. Tracks may be saved to file for later reviewing and log book entries can be manually and automatically entered. Unlimited number of routes and waypoints can be created and used to assist the navigation. The screen area for charts is maximized with most functions accessed with the right mouse button. Zooming is provided with support for IntelliMouse wheel. SeaClear is created for nautical navigation but can probably be used for other navigation needs. System requirements: SeaClear is a nifty program for planning and navigating your next sea trip. All data and tracks are stored and saved to disk when the PC is shut down. If you have a GPS receiver and a PC with a serial port connected it is just a matter of moving a mouse to open SeaClear. Standalone features: - Routes may be saved to file so you don't have to create them all the time; - It is capable of saving waypoints, waypoints and routes in text and Excel format, as well as saved pictures; - A backup is stored in case the PC crashes. This is a simple text file that contains the path to the saved tracks, routes and waypoints. What's New in the SeaClear?

Zooming is provided with support for IntelliMouse wheel. SeaClear is created for nautical navigation but can probably be used for other navigation needs. Some programs are able to find a bit of a signal without a GPS unit and SeaClear does so as well as a more powerful program (such as Homer) can in many cases. I only know because we have a Yacht that is sitting in a marina at a dock and, at the time of the tests, I was using a Nokia N80 and a PDA like the IntelliMouse for Mouse Control to navigate it. I did have a GPS unit with me. The program was able to find the signal and continue with the route. I'll have to look at the settings for the GPS unit I have and if it is not at the dock to test it. I may need to have it tethered via USB. My PC has USB ports and it is also possible to connect a GPS that is in use (which I do). I'll have to see what the signal is like at the other dock. I do have an option for Automatically surf for a signal or Show only as a radio signal. I'd want to run it with automatic surf as that will try to track and use a GPS at all times to get the best fixes and the least dropped. It will also give me a good reading of how accurate the signal is at all times. I tested this a long time ago and it was very good, but I do not have a lot of time to deal with navigation now. This program was very good, but now I'm using Sea Pilot, so I do not have the time for testing and recording errors. _____ "In order to invent, you need a good imagination and a lot of junk" Thomas Edison I haven't tested it in years so I'm sure there are new features. But in the past it would only search for the best signal and if that was very poor, it would beep and stop and report the current position, what the route was and what fix it was. The GPS will change the fix at each crossing and will report each change, so there will always be a fix at the end of each leg. The only difference is that it will not check for signal again until it finds a much better signal and
