The pictures come out really crisp in the computer but when printed the colours aren't as vibrant. Any one have any ideas why? Hi everyone, I am using Photoshop CS and I am having trouble printing my work. I have tried printing to a laserjet printer, a normal printer and even printing directly to a photo paper as if it was a normal printer. In all cases the colour of the things I design (text, clothes etc.) becomes the flat colour of the screen it was created in. To test this I have tried clicking on the coloured text then right clicking and going 'File->Print' on the coloured text. I have printed settings to achieve the correct colours and the layout on screen but the colour printed out is a totally different colour. Does anyone have any ideas? I have tried printing settings to achieve the correct colours and the layout on screen but the colour printed out is a totally different colour. Does anyone have any ideas? you may need to tweak the Layers panel's display filter to see and apply what you want and see, and possibly try printing to different devices, as what you are getting is very output dependant, and unfortunately this isn't yet a consistent as it should be with photoshop, but you can get quite close, at least with the basics. Another thing you could try is separating out your layers into individual
