It seems like there are lots of ways that cloud computing services can be provided to end users. The benefits of "managed" and "unmanaged" cloud computing versus "self-managed" cloud computing seem to be pretty consistent with the way I describe them in my head, and they all seem to be missing some aspect of Cloud Computing, except the one I explicitly describe. But it's not clear why this is the case. I'd expect that the main advantages would be that users can skip many of the managerial tasks that cloud computing services providers have
