"I can't tell you how many times I've been in an opening and someone has run out of time and gone to their computer, loaded Photoshop, and voila—it was a massive success." —COURTNEY GORMAN ## USING PHOTOSHOP Photoshop became so popular among the masses in the mid-1990s because of the ease of use that made it easy for even beginners to work with images, yet at the same time gave professionals the ability to create complex designs. The power to create complicated designs in one place and see them come to life within the image, with the ability to personalize the image with text, borders, and other features, became a game changer for designers in the digital age. To this day Photoshop is still the ultimate tool for creating professional-looking images.

There's an excellent new JS library out there that can help you present data in a useful and engaging way. So I figured that I'd take some time out to see what it's like - and what it offers - in action. Visualization is sometimes a hard thing to get right. I'll be the first to admit it. The other day I got a huge email asking me to review an application, and I really struggled to figure out what to tell the client. My suggestion - "Have a look at this application, and see if it would be of use to you". We've been working at Appii for a couple of years now, and until recently, the project was receiving quite a lot of funding. You know, that thing called a "budget". That's meant to mean that we should be able to pay our bills, spend time working on the project and keep our team relatively stable so that we can continue to keep up to date with the latest tech, design and be able to deliver projects on time. You might not be aware of it, but we've been tracking apps in the iTunes App Store for a while now - for one simple reason, they are an incredibly useful resource for us. Here at Appii, we have a team of talented developers that are constantly looking at all of the free apps on iTunes for inspiration, and we also try and take a peek at each and every submission. Over the last couple of months, we've been working on a collection of really fun and useful apps, and I'll be showing you the top 3 here - we think that they're great. Cloud Sync in Compose is an app that we wrote last year - it allows you to sync your Dropbox folder with your Mac, iOS and Android devices. We recently released version 1.2 of the app and fixed a lot of bugs and added a few features. I'd recommend checking it out.[Assessment of nutritional status of children in health post]. Nutritional assessment is a basic component in the health care of children. Its evaluation of the health needs of children, in order to establish their basic rights for food, growth and health, is essential. The objective of this study was to determine the prevalence of stunting, underweight and wasted in their nutritional health using the weight/age index, and the nutritional assessment was performed through anthropometric measurements (weight/height) in the health post in Sulgrave. It was a retrospective cross-
