The high symmetry and short bond distances would lead to a high metal-support interaction and a strong covalent interaction between the Cu atoms and BN, which probably accounts for the remarkable catalytic activity of the Cu-2-Mo-6-BN nanocomposite. In addition, the unpassivated Cu-atom surface also allows the easy adsorption of H-2- molecules into the Cu-2-Mo-6-BN, and the H-2- molecules are then dissociated to give active H atoms on the Cu-2-Mo-6-BN catalyst for the hydrogenation reactions[@b51], which might also contribute to the excellent catalytic performance of the Cu-2-Mo-6-BN. The application of the Cu-2-Mo-6-BN nanocomposite catalyst in the aerobic oxidation of glycerol to glycerol-3-phosphate (G3P) and the ethanol-to-G3P dehydrogenation reaction were further investigated in a fixed-bed reactor under atmospheric conditions. The mixture of glycerol and methanol were chosen as feedstocks for catalytic oxidation, and the sole G3P was the product in the oxidation process. As shown in [Table 1][#1][ref-type="table"], the selectivity for G3P was about 82% in the glycerol-only and the mixed G3P/Gly reactions, and the Icelandic capital of Reykjavik is planning to welcome the world's only direct commercial flight to China this summer. The airline Icelandair announced the plan earlier this month, and is expected to offer two flights a week by the summer of 2016. It may seem unusual to fly between Iceland and China, but flights are not that new. The two countries have been inching toward a direct connection for a few years now. Earlier this year, the European Union approved a provisional agreement to allow Chinese airlines to fly to Iceland. However, these recent developments may be relatively meaningless. The connection between Iceland and China has already been growing with time and with renewed interest. In 2008, Iceland's political independence was celebrated with the attendance of then president of Iceland, Vigdís Finnbogadóttir, in Beijing. With many Icelanders having Chinese ancestry, direct flights to China have been floated for a while, as long as China's air quality was controlled. But the event didn't really catch fire, and it wasn't until recently that the connection materialized. Today, China and Iceland are experiencing a very tight relationship. The two countries are connected by trade and by tourism. Icelandic and Chinese tourists are
