The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission's (SEC) Division of Enforcement (Division) announced today that Christina Petersen of Chicago, Illinois, has been charged with violating federal securities laws related to the offering and distribution of investment products that allegedly misrepresented the nature of the interest, terms, and risks associated with such products. According to the charges filed in the SEC's Chicago Regional Office, Petersen began offering and distributing investment products in the Chicago area in or about November 2011. Petersen and her company, Platinum Capital Investments LLC (PCI), are charged with failing to provide investors with important information about the high fees paid by investors in exchange for the purported investment yields offered by PCI. The charges allege that the PCIs' investment products — offered online and by phone — were merely a front to offer fee-based investments that the defendants knew would not provide any returns. Specifically, the charges allege that the PCIs were paying investment advisors (IA) a flat monthly fee to manage the PCIs' funds, but that these funds were then being invested for PCI's benefit in risky financial instruments that were not suitable for PCI's customers, and that PCI was not adequately compensating the IAs for their costs and risks. In the Los Angeles Regional Office, a complaint was filed alleging that Gregory Smith and DC Design Build, LLC, sold investment products to customers in the Los Angeles area that allegedly failed to disclose or misrepresented the high fees paid by investors in exchange for the purported investment yields offered by the defendants. The SEC's complaint alleges that from October 2012 through April 2013, Smith and DC Design Build offered and sold investment products in various forms and by various means, including over the Internet and by phone, to customers in
