The Photoshop Interface Figure 4-1 shows the default interface with Image menu open. From the Image menu, choose Open to open an image file. Otherwise, click the Browse button and locate your image file. Figure 4-1 Default Photoshop interface with Image menu selected. The most important tool in the Photoshop interface is the image itself. From the image you have opened, you can click and drag the background down to one or more rows of thumbnail images. Drag the image to the left or right to see the image's edges. Photoshop organizes thumbnail images within rows using layer groups. You can click to select a specific thumbnail to view that image's layer settings. Layer groups are discussed further in the next section. You can then select a specific image layer and use the Layer menu to change the image's color, exposure, or any other setting available to the given layer. Layer Groups Layer groups enable you to group thumbnail images, filters, and setting adjustments together so that you can manipulate them as a unit. Figure 4-2 shows the default layer groups that are available with the Open dialog. Figure 4-2 Layer groups when an image is open. Figure 4-3 shows a layer group of four thumbnail images. Factor V Leiden mutation and hyperhomocysteinaemia in children undergoing cardiac surgery. Factor V Leiden mutation and homocysteinaemia have been identified as independent risk factors for venous thrombosis in adults. The incidence of both abnormalities has not been established in the paediatric population. The aim of this study was to define their prevalence in children undergoing cardiac surgery. Pre- and post-operative blood samples were obtained from 120 children undergoing cardiac surgery. Homocysteine was measured by fluorescence polarization immunoassay. Factor V Leiden mutation was detected by polymerase chain reaction followed by restriction enzyme analysis. Eight children (6.7%) were heterozygous for the factor V Leiden mutation and homocysteinaemia was demonstrated in 13 (10.8%). The overall prevalence of factor V Leiden was 10.8% and that of hyperhomocysteinaemia was 13%. Hyperhomocysteinaemia was present in 7.5% of patients without a history of thrombosis and in 38.9% of patients with thrombosis. The incidence of factor V Leiden mutation and hyperhomocysteinaemia in this paediatric population undergoing cardiac surgery appears to be comparable with the adult population.
