Adsorption of nitrate on quartz: a comprehensive review of recent research progress. Recent research progress on the adsorption of nitrate on quartz has been summarized. Nitrate adsorption is of considerable environmental and industrial significance. It is challenging to adapt the traditional Langmuir and Freundlich models to account for the sorption behavior of NO₃⁻, and this significantly constrains the knowledge gained from previous studies. Adsorption mechanisms including cation exchange, surface complexation, as well as the competitive adsorption among cations and NO₃⁻ are described in detail. The adsorption capacity of quartz increases with decreasing pH as well as with increasing concentration of SO₄²⁻, NO₃⁻, and PO₄³⁻ but decreases with increasing K⁺ concentration. This review also focuses on the source of NO₃⁻, initial condition, and the effect of Ca²⁺ at different concentrations. It is found that the desorption of NO₃⁻ is the important step for the final desorption of total nitrate and the desorption behavior is influenced by pH, the mass of NO₃⁻, and the concentration of NaCl and CaCl₂. In addition, interrelationships between the stability of various surface complexes, change in electrostatic potential, and ion adsorption are summarized. Key issues in the research on the adsorption of NO3- on quartz and the influence of factors on adsorption have been discussed. Finally, challenges and research prospects have been highlighted.Q: What's the best way to ensure someone doesn't hack my mail server? I have a linux mail server with access to all of the incoming messages, and my main concern is someone hacking my server and reading my private mail. I don't send anything confidential, and the message content is not really important to me. What's the best way to ensure my server will not be hacked? I have fail2ban
