When choosing between Photoshop and Paint Shop Pro (Paint Shop Pro is a Mac program), choose the latter if you are more familiar with a vector illustration program like Illustrator. You'll find the simplest but non-destructive tutorial in this book for building a beautiful title that follows a similar workflow as Photoshop, including built-in fill-pattern options that enhance the look of the title. Adding text to your image Add text to your image with one of Photoshop's two basic text options: the Character Map and Text options. Adobe and other software packages usually include a bundled version of the Character Map tool that helps you copy and paste text from other applications or from the Internet, but you can also use this tool to write or draw your own text (see Figure 2-3). The Text tool in Photoshop enables you to enter text in a variety of formats and select which fonts you want to use. The options are as follows: Text Frame: Enter text in a frame and drag it around the image. Type on Path: Drag text from the Character Map to your image's frame. Translate: Drag text from the Character Map to the image's frame. On Path: Drag text from the Character Map to the image's frame and type the text. Off Path: Type the text freehand or in a type tool like the Type tool. (You must have one of the newer versions of Photoshop to access the Type tool, discussed in the next section.) Anti-alias: Photoshop's most useful type tool offers many settings that allow you to make your text look smooth and professional. Custom: Use Photoshop's Create a Custom Type tool (whew) to customize the character. After you've typed the text, you can edit the font and setting options. In the following sections, I show you how to use the Character Map to enter text, and then I describe how to add more text options.

- Type: Click this option to toggle between the three types of text options I discuss in the preceding list.
- Text Frame: Use this option to add text to an existing text frame or type on a path.
- Type on Path: Use this option

You can add a background layer to blend an image and a pattern, such as wallpaper, into one image. Use the Image Adjustments (Image ? Adjustments ? Curves) or Hue/Saturation (Image ? Adjustments ? Hue/Saturation) tool to adjust the image's color or tone. The Curves tool can help you create non-photo-like images. To create a black-and-white or grayscale image, you can use the Hue/Saturation tool. In the Hue/Saturation dialog box, you can click the middle button (to the right of the Hue field) to use a color wheel to choose a color and then to choose a second color to black-and-white the first color. You can preview and use a color wheel as you work. The Grainy Text tool creates text that appears grainy and artistic. To add artistic blur, use the Magic Wand tool. The Actions panel enables you to automate various tasks within a single image. You can edit other photos in Elements if you save them in the same folder. To share photos with someone, you can copy a group of photos or create a web link. The Organizer, which stores and organizes your photos, is 05a79cecff

Q: Ajax.BeginForm with model and view model I'm using Ajax.BeginForm to submit request. In the parameter ViewData["myParam"] = myValue; I'm also passing an object with a whole bunch of (string) properties. It gets serialized from the view before submitting the request to the controller. But on the server side, the properties of the object aren't serialized. So I would like to build the object again on the server side. What could I do? --Update The controller action [HttpGet] public ActionResult(ViewModel viewModel, string myParam) { var myObject = new MyClass(); myObject.Property1 = viewModel.Property1; myObject.Property2 = viewModel.Property2; ... viewModel.MyParameters.Add(myObject.Property1.GetProperty1Value()); viewModel.MyParameters.Add(myObject.Property1.GetProperty2Value()); } A: The problem is in your approach, instead of serializing, which is Ok, you are again sending back the data in form method (post) and that does not allow you to set all model properties. For jquery ajax request you would need to have a post request with all the model properties, and on server side you would have to recreate that object. The main problem is that you don't have these properties when you post request. And this isn't easy to solve by only using serialization. The answer is simple, use JSON for your request, all the properties will get in json and at the server side you will just need to parse the json into an object. Also a better approach is to accept ViewModels in your controller action, and create a new instance of the view model in your action. This gives you the flexibility to create a new instance of the view model, and add/remove properties from it. On client side you will have the options to do a serialization, or when converting the post request to be a GET, use jquery ajax for ajax request Updated [HttpGet] public ActionResult(ViewModel viewModel) { var myObject = new
