* In the following sections, we introduce the basic principles of Photoshop's layer system, the common tools, and some basic layer-grouping techniques. * Photoshop is the most basic and accessible of the image editing programs available. However, it lacks many features that its more professional competitors have, such as color management. Photoshop can be a great starting point for learning other Photoshop editors, but use caution when using Photoshop as a replacement for more powerful editing software. Photoshop's Layers By default, you work on your picture in the Background layer. To move to another layer, simply click on another layer tab, labeled with a number. When you're finished working on a layer, simply click on the background layer to bring it to the front. Creating the Layers One of the most helpful features in Photoshop is the layer system. Each layer can contain objects that may either be raster or vector objects. Raster Layers Raster layers (known in Photoshop as the Paint Bucket) are layers that create visual layers by adding color, drawing, or text. While you can work with raster layers in other programs, such as illustrator, Photoshop works particularly well with them. In the following steps, we show you how to create a simple red raster layer and color it. To create a raster layer: 1. In the Layers palette, double-click on the Background layer to make it active. You may already have several layers on your Background, so this may not be the first active layer. If so, click on the layer tab and click on the Background layer. 2. In the toolbar, click on the Red Color Swatch at the far left, and click the Brush tool. 3. Click in the selection box on the image, and drag out a red box (see Figure 9-1). 4. Click the New Layer button at the bottom left of the Layers palette, then name the layer Red. Click OK to lock the layer. 5. Click on the Layer Styles in the toolbar. In the Layers palette, you should see a white box appear around your red layer, indicating that this is a new layer (see Figure 9-2). Figure 9-1: Select a red color and create the Red layer. Figure 9-2: The white box around the layer indicates that it is a new layer.

42% of internet users think of contraception when they think of birth control. Women who are new mothers might have a relationship with their bodies in a way that the women who had babies earlier did not. Women who have been pregnant often believe their reproductive system is broken; they feel like they cannot sustain life on their own. There are also a number of women out there who just like to "do it the old-fashioned way" when it comes to birth control, e.g. sleeping with condoms, diaphragms, spermicides, or any other method that keeps them from getting pregnant. There's probably no greater novelty that a woman has throughout her pregnancy and after she's given birth. No one's ever gonna be as excited to go camping as you will be. There's no better way to express yourself and your independence than to give birth to a healthy baby. Ladies of the higher income brackets are often under a great deal of pressure to become pregnant before they are ready to start a family. Being pregnant is the only place to be at this time of year for most of the nation. Your body is always changing and changing, from the unique way you feel in one area, to the way you feel in another. This is something you can't do at home. You have to do it at a hospital. Eventually there's a calm period when you can focus on the waiting. At that point, your first breath of fresh air means that your body is about to change again. You have to know what you want. This is not something you can learn easily in the backseat of a car. Having a baby is one of the most personal things you'll ever do. It's a time of learning, growing and changing. You develop a new family and a new set of responsibilities. It is a time of self-discovery. Your body is changing, and you are changing. You gain new life experiences, and find new strength. There's no more adventurous way to experience these changes than to have a baby. No matter how young or old you are, there's something about holding a new baby that is exciting and rewarding. There is never any reason to think that you'll be
