Overexpression of ARPC4 enhances the proliferation and migration of retinoblastoma cells by inactivation of the proteasome pathway. The 21-kD small subunit of the 26S proteasome is encoded by the ARPC4 gene, which has previously been identified as a potential tumor suppressor gene. However, the functional role of ARPC4 in human cancer remains largely unknown. In the present study, we found that ARPC4 protein was overexpressed in retinoblastoma cell lines and tissues. Knockdown of ARPC4 by small interfering RNA in WERI-Rb-1 cells increased the cell proliferation rate, colony formation, and migration abilities, while overexpression of ARPC4 in Y79 cells had the opposite effects. Furthermore, overexpression of ARPC4 enhanced the proteasome activity and the expression of cyclin D1 in Y79 cells, while knockdown of ARPC4 reduced the proteasome activity and expression of cyclin D1 in WERI-Rb-1 cells. Taken together, these data suggest that ARPC4 may function as an oncogene, probably by inactivating the proteasome pathway and activating the proteasome chaperone.

One Foot in the Past. A Second Foot in the Future: The Application of a Conceptual Model to a Simulated Decipherment of the Unified Greek Bases for the Word-Formation Process. The aim of this study was to examine some empirical aspects of the Greek base word derivation and to further examine the applicability of a cognitive processing model (the Integrated Contextual Thesis) to Greek word-formation processes. Five studies were conducted: participants in Study 1 and Study 2 were asked to make an inference based on information derived from a Greek
