Birth of a World Birth of a World is the fourth album by Swedish dark folk metal band Watain. The album was released on January 23, 2011 by Regain Records and was the band's first release for that label. Background Early on in the writing process, the album was written with a "melodic and more accessible" approach than previous Watain albums. The band was influenced by the progressive and electronic metal scene. The song "Symphony of the Damned" was written as a tribute to the works of Devin Townsend, and incorporated heavy use of vocals by the band's new vocalist Luella. Death metal influences were also found on a few songs, such as "Slaves to the Bloodlust", "Wrath of the Innocent" and "The World in Flames". The traditional drum sound of the band was slightly modified for these songs. Death metal composer Mike Wead was guest on a song called "The World in Flames". Wead has also played with Watain on tour. Release and promotion With the exception of "The Wardens of the Plague" and "Wrath of the Innocent", the songs were recorded by the band in the studio, at the start of the recording session for the album. The band recorded the album at Völle's home studio from his home and he mixed the album with his digital recording system at his home studio. The album was released by the band's new label Regain Records on January 23, 2011. The band has promoted the album with shows across Europe, and also released the album with a DVD. A music video has been made for the song "Wrath of the Innocent" and is
